WORKSHOP 5

Making a request to have a place

Dear parents,

During his visit, Minipally told us about a good way to make a friend understand that we want a place. His friend Max the dog used to scream when he wanted something, but now he knows that it's better to ask with words to make himself understood. At home, there are reserved places too, special places that I like to use: Daddy's place, Mommy's place at the table, places on the chairs in the living room, for example. Sometimes I need your help to know how to get a place.

Workshop 5: Making a request to have a place

My child is learning that he has to ask to get a place, especially if that place is already designated as belonging to another member of the family, or if someone is already sitting there.

- I invite my child to ask his brother before sitting in his chair or in his place in the car.
- I congratulate my child when he asks to sit near me or on my knees like his brother and says, "Me too."
- As a parent, I ask my child before sitting next to him in his bed to read a story, for example.
